I want the program to be disabled only if it is already running. I want to disable only one program on boot. I use Ubuntu 18.04 A: In general you have to know what you want exactly. A machine that has some service starting on boot, and a machine that does not have such a service, but needs one. Unless you have a strong reason for doing this, and you understand what you're doing and why you're doing it, you're better off not doing it. "It should work" and "I do it all the time" are not good reasons for configuring a computer. If you have a server which may have to run for several years, and which should not be turned off for obvious reasons, and you're sure there are no other reasons for having your service start on boot, then disable the service. But if you run a server just for a few weeks or a year, don't do it. If you have a desktop machine that has no need for such a service, and you're sure there are no other reasons for having a service start on boot, then disable it. But you don't want a new user to be confused. I am not the only user who configures such things. You can go to the home folder of a typical desktop user. You will find some cron-file named crontab. There you will find the lines @reboot /etc/init.d/foo start @reboot /etc/init.d/bar start You can comment out these lines using comments and then run sudo dpkg-reconfigure foo as root for a default configuration of a
