The Longest Yard is a 2005 American sports comedy film directed by Adam Sandler, written by Mike Bender, and starring Sandler, James Cromwell, Michael Cera, and Chris Rock. It is the second Sandler feature film after Happy Gilmore to be released as a summer box office bomb, following his previous release, The Wedding Singer, and is considered a critical and commercial failure. The Longest Yard was the last film that Sandler was signed to direct in the mainstream studio system. The title of the film is a parody of The Longest Yard (1974), and numerous references to the other films in the series are made. The three other films, The Mack (1996), The Longest Yard 2: Jailbreak (2003), and The Longest Yard: True Crime (2006), are canonized, making a canonical tie to the fourth. Plot Paul Crewe (Sandler) is a football star who is also an alcoholic and is being charged with destroying gambling "systems" that he had set up for a criminal organization. He is sent to prison after being acquitted of his previous charges of destruction of property. Paul is assigned to work with a stuttering boy named Sherman Alexie (Cera) who serves as his assistant. Paul is also given
