Using my own money, I purchased a ticket for a HAWAIIAN PICNIC at a nearby park. The gift was unwrapped, and I was left speechless. I couldn't believe what my Secret Santa had gotten me! He sent me a box of five different kinds of FRESH GUAVAS.

(I have never had guava before!) I had no idea what this gift meant, how it came to be. My Santa was super nice, and sent me a nice message about it. (It was great getting to know him, too.) :) Really, really grateful for this gift and the kindness of my Santa. :)

It's an app that can compress/uncompress, read/write and format files. First, you must download and install the "Png Compressor" program that will work with the "Png Outline" program. I have run into a couple of difficulties while using this compression program. First, the icon on the taskbar or quick launch bar will only show up if you "unmaximize" a window. The problem is, if you have several windows open (including IE) and you maximize that icon to the quick launch bar, it will only show you the icon for the. Any way of fixing that??? -.- This is annoying because I have 10 or so windows open and I then get a lot of extra icons on the bar when I unmaximize. Sorry guys, I'm a newb at this, but figured I'd throw the question out there to see if someone may know. For a while now, I've been trying to find a program that will let me add comments and other notes into/on my T Does anyone know of a really good (preferably portable) software (I use Win) that would let you comment, annotate, highlight, outline, edit, etc. through the various types of programs that you can use to change a presentation and the program doesn't screw up the authoring? Even something as simple as a red line beneath certain key words to show where you're reading this as it would be nice to annotate a presentation. I'm going to be addressing this question based on screen readers.. If you want to highlight text, you can use Poppler or a third party application like Inkscape to do so, you can use html and have a few different options. There's a tutorial here on how to do it with Inkscape. If you want to comment, you can use the comment command for LibreOffice If you want to annotate, you can use scribble for PowerPoint, Power
