Dipeptidyl peptidase-4 (DPP-4) is a serine protease homologous to DPP-8/9 expressed on the luminal side of the epithelial cells, where it acts as a peptidase, regulating both the activity of epidermal growth factor in breast cancer and the surface expression of co-stimulatory molecules on the dendritic cells. DPP-4 inhibitors prevent degradation of the incretin, glucose-dependent insulinotropic polypeptide, and glucagon-like peptide-1 (GLP-1) and improve their biological effects and therapeutic properties. Therapeutic effects of DPP-4 inhibitors on Type 2 diabetes have also been reported. Preclinical studies suggest that DPP-4 may also play a role in the pathogenesis and progression of a variety of autoimmune and inflammatory disorders. In this review, we will describe the current knowledge of the biology of DPP-4 and the roles of DPP-4 in pathologic conditions. Furthermore, we will discuss the therapeutic potential of DPP-4 inhibitors as a new and innovative class of anti-inflammatory drugs. wedge-shaped reconstruction of the atrioventricular bundle and septum. Three-dimensional imaging of the atrioventricular (A-V) conduction system is a complex task. The bi-atrial approach offers a unique opportunity to obtain three-dimensional representation of this system with a single transesophageal echocardiographic view.
Early experience with the procedure has resulted in a technique for the reconstruction of the A-V bundle and septum. To review the technical aspects of the technique and document interobserver and intraobserver variability. Three-dimensional atrioventricular bundle and septum reconstruction was performed in 27 patients.
The tip of the bi-atrial probe was placed at the level of the annulus. Circumferential sweeps of the septum and proximal CS were displayed. A computer process extrapolated the cross-sectional view onto a continuous length of endocardial surface.

This was then modified to a wedge shape. The A-V junction was delineated by two reference points on the anterior and inferior wall. Intraobserver and interobserver variability was assessed by two different observers on five different patients. Three-dimensional atrioventricular bundle and septum reconstruction was successfully performed in all patients. No significant interobserver variability was seen for the intraobserver measurements. The mean frame rate was 33 +/- 9 frames/sec. The lateral and posterior borders of the A-V septum were visualized in all patients. Three-dimensional atrioventricular bundle and septum reconstruction is a simple and accurate procedure to delineate the three planes of the A-V junction. Intraobserver variability is excellent. Three-dimensional reconstruction of the A-V septum is feasible and may be useful in patients undergoing electrophysiologic studies.
