Thanks everybody. [18F]fluorodeoxyglucose positron emission tomography in sarcoma. In many sarcomas, radiotherapy is followed by rapid tumor progression. Therefore, efforts are under way to identify new targeted therapies. Tumor glucose metabolism is one of the earliest events that occurs in the carcinogenesis process. The metabolic properties of sarcomas may be an additional means to gain insight into the aggressiveness of a tumor in vivo and to adapt the therapeutic strategy. The aim of our study was to analyze the use of positron emission tomography with [(18)F]fluorodeoxyglucose (FDG-PET) in the management of sarcomas, especially in sarcomas of the extremities. This retrospective study included patients who had undergone PET with FDG for a sarcoma of the extremities between January 1994 and July 2001 and who were referred to our laboratory for diagnostic purposes. FDG-PET with computer-aided three-dimensional analysis was performed according to a standardized protocol. Twenty-two patients were included (11 males, 11 females; mean age, 44 years). Fifteen patients had a tumor of the extremities. All patients had a final diagnosis of sarcoma, and the extent of the involvement of the soft tissue and the bone was evaluated. Based on the PET results, in 19 of 22 cases, the FDG-PET scan was negative, while three tumors showed increased FDG uptake. In three of these three cases, histological examinations revealed an already known sarcoma.

The site that i want to scrape is contains the following data and therefore my problem arises: A: It is currently quite unclear what you're trying to do, but it seems like you are trying to parse a script on a website. I would suggest using an HTML parser for that, and you might want to try Selenium Webdriver if you want to automate a browser to do so. As for the script itself you can pass that to the child_process.exec() function of node.js, which is what you'd use anyway with webdriver. var child = require('child_process'); var script = ''; child.exec(script, function(err, stdout, stderr) { console.log(stdout); }); This invention relates to integrated circuit technology and, more particularly, to semiconductor integrated circuit memory arrays, and their efficient fabrication and testing. The continuing trend in the semiconductor industry is to increase the density of integrated circuit devices by decreasing the minimum dimensions of the devices. The speed and capacity of computers is directly related to the speed and capacity of memory. A major limitation on the scaling of memory arrays has been the number of input/output terminals available for each pin of the array. The reduction in array size has been accompanied by a reduction in the number of terminals, making it increasingly difficult to test the individual array cells. As the number of external terminals for a given array size is decreased, it becomes increasing difficult to test the individual cells. The great increase in memory array size combined with the decrease in the number of external terminals has become a significant obstacle to further progress in memory array technology. FIG. 1 is a schematic of a portion of a memory array 10 (i.e., a subsection of a full memory array). The memory array 10 comprises a series of memory arrays 12 and a corresponding number of input/output (I/O) buffer devices 14. Each of the memory arrays 12 may be a 512 or 1024 by 512 memory cells
